Welcome to the Niche Finder's Report, Volume 2. This report includes an in-depth look at three niches, a "quick look" at a half dozen more, plus tips and ideas to help you brainstorm up even more profitable markets.

The "word counts," KEI (keyword effectiveness index) and other measurements were compiled using the Wordtracker database. Wordtracker essentially estimates how many times the keywords you input will be searched across various search engines, it looks at how many competing sites contain those same keywords, and then spits out the KEI which is just an estimation of how good the keyword is.

For example: if there are 150 searches per day in Google on a particular keyword or keyword phrase, but only one competing website, that's a good word for you to target since you don't have much competition.

But here's the thing: the KEI only matters if you plan on doing search engine marketing. If you are doing press releases or joint ventures or using affiliates or classified ads or any number of non-search engine related methods, the KEI just isn't that important. Instead, you need to be looking at your competition overall, and how to beat them by providing an interesting USP (unique sales proposition).

If you are interested in search engine marketing, here's a warning: don't base your decisions solely on the KEI value. Just because a keyword has a low KEI value doesn't mean you shouldn't target it. My advice is to hit up the search engines and actually LOOK at your competition. You may find that you have lots of competitors, but you may also find their sites aren't really optimized. Spend a few extra minutes working on your site, and YOU can be at the top of the search engines for valuable keywords.

As an example: I once did a search on a particular hobby. The KEI didn't look good (all low values for the best words). But when I went to the search engines and looked at my competition, I found that mainly I was up against amateur webmasters who were more interested in their hobby than in getting into the top of the search engines. Easy to beat.

Now, in cases where search engine marketing isn't at the top of your list, you would be more interested in looking at the "counts" – or how many times a keyword is searched. This way you can use the counts as an estimation of how many people are interested in that niche. Plus, you can get some very valuable information about what people want.

For example, suppose you started thinking about the market of buyers who want to build their own swimming pools. And suppose that you're thinking about monetizing a related site by providing an ebook chock full of "how to" information.

Now when you start doing your search you'll most likely uncover exactly what people want to read about. But you may hit on some things you never thought of. For example, you may find people searching for certain pool parts at certain prices. BINGO – now you know your site will be even more profitable if you provide affiliate links to these parts. Or perhaps you also want to take this information and create an AdWords campaign targeting these parts buyers. Regardless of how you choose to do it, you now have the info you need to make dabbling in this market profitable for you.

Finally, let's take a look at how most of these keyword lists will be ordered and labeled...

Unless otherwise noted, the first list you'll receive on each of these niches below will be an ordered list of keywords from most searched to least searched. This means that this list is useful if you are primarily interested in seeing what phrases are likely to be searched the most on any given day (predictions are based on daily estimates).

The second set of lists include the KEI values for the top 100 key phrases in three of the top search engines (Google, Yahoo, and MSN). I've provided results from those three so that you can optimize certain web pages for certain engines. This list is ordered by descending KEI values. So those nearest the top of the list are theoretically better (again, this only matters IF you are doing search engine marketing, and it's only a big concern if your competition is actually optimizing rather than accidentally getting to the top).

Here is an explanation of the headings for these two types of lists, as taken from Wordtracker documentation:

----- [Explanation of the Headings] -----

1: Line Number.

2: KEI (Keyword Effectiveness Index): Compares the 24Hour result with the number of competing web pages to pinpoint exactly which keywords are most effective for your campaign.

In a nutshell: Look for the keywords near the top. The higher the KEI, the more popular your keywords are, and the less competition they have. Which means you have a better chance of getting to the top.

Use the following guide:

0 - 10 Poor keyword to target
10 - 100 Good keyword to target
100 - 400 Very good keyword to target

400+ Excellent keyword to target

3: Count: The number of times people have entered this keyword from 323151770 search queries. These have been taken from the various MetaCrawlers that we survey.

4: 24Hrs: Using information taken from StatMarket, we have estimated the number of queries this keyword might receive in the current 24 hour period for msn (Search Engine).

5: Competing: The number of competing web pages in (Search Engine).

You are currently using ' exact match searching' , where the keywords are enclosed by quotation marks. We recommend using ' exact match searching' as you are actually competing with sites which have used the keyword exactly as typed in by the user.

6: Keyword.

Enough intro – let's jump in and look at our markets and how we can profit from them...

Niche Report #1: Pergolas

My first question when I stumbled on this market was, “what the heck is a pergola?” Soon enough I found they were related to garden arbors. In fact, some sites used these terms interchangeably. Other sites defined the difference as to whether they were enclosed on three sides (arbors) or not (pergolas). Still other sites said pergolas were more “architectural” in terms of pillars, and are often made of stone, where arbors tend to have lattice work and are made of wood.

Since nailing down differences between the two is difficult, we’ll just lump them together for our purposes under a general category of things to make your yard or garden prettier. Also, we’ll concentrate on pergolas so that the “arbors” keyword lists don’t get all “contaminated” with searches in reference to Arbor Day and Ann Arbor (Michigan).

So what do people in this market want? Topping out the pergola keyword lists are people searching for how to build pergolas. They want “pergola designs” and “pergola plans” and “how to build a pergola.” Those are in the top five most-searched words, right behind the general searches for “pergola” and “pergolas.” Likewise, a good chunk of the people searching for arbors are looking for plans and designs.

Think about it. Chances are people aren't looking for general information about arbors and pergolas. They want to know how to build one, they want to know where to buy one. And if buying or building a pergola is like many other decorative items, people want to be UNIQUE.

You see, I come from a family of avid flower gardeners (although I clearly missed out on getting that gene, since I didn't even know what a pergola was until I looked it up). These folks love to put unique little decorations in their garden, whether it be an old wagon wheel, a pretty fountain, a bird house, those little solar lights, benches to sit on, etc.

They enjoy having other flower enthusiasts come and admire their gardens, and they enjoy admiring other people's gardens. But here's the real key: when they see someone else's garden, they aren't just admiring it...they're also looking for new, unique ideas to implement in their own garden.

Unique is the key word. If Suzy goes over to Jill's house and sees a pretty pergola, she's not going to run out and get one exactly like Jill's. Heck no. She's going to get a more creative, "better" one.

And THAT'S one of the underlying desires you need to appeal to when you enter this niche. You want to appeal to people's desires to be complimented by their friends. You want to appeal to their desire to have their friends say, "wow, Suzy your flower garden is just SO creative and beautiful. I could never do anything like that.” In other words, you want your prospective targets to know that building or buying the perfect pergola WILL be an ego stroke.

Although unresearched, my hunch is that the majority of your target market will be comprised of females. As a general rule, females will not strut around and beat their chests, gloating about their pergola. Instead, they want their pergola to speak for itself. AND they don't want to see their next-door-neighbor with the same pergola. So you need to let these women know their pergola will be the talk of the neighborhood...but that she personally won't be considered “boastful” by having such a beautiful and unique pergola. (Of course you don't say it like that, but that's one of the underlying desires you may want to hit).

So now that we know the desires of this market, how should you go about profiting from this niche?

The most obvious answer is to deliver exactly what they want: a blueprint book showing them how to build a pergola. You can create a book full of different ideas, or sell each unique idea separately.

Don't know how to build a pergola, so you have no idea how to go about writing a book of plans? Not a problem. Sure, you could outsource this task by hiring an expert to do it. However, another idea is to ask a group of experts in the field to share their pergola ideas...and perhaps even a pergola design plan. Or perhaps present them with a pergola blueprint, and ask them how they would modify this plan to make it even more unique. Perhaps that would be an even better idea, since it's easier for an expert to make modification suggestions rather than laying out an entire plan for you.

By asking the experts in the niche (this or any niche) for content, you not only get your book written fast by experts, you also usually have a group of people ready and willing to promote the book when it's finished.

Another idea is to run a contest where your website guests submit their best pergola designs (or as mentioned above, their best pergola modifications). In this case you'd need to have all contestants sign a form that basically says you are allowed to use their entry in a compilation book. Your best bet is of course to have your lawyer look over the form.

If you go this route, make sure that you use plenty of submissions in the final book – and more importantly, make part of the “prize” being that their design idea will be featured in a book. Otherwise if you only have a couple ideas in the book, the people whose ideas you're using may feel like you took advantage of them – like you're profiting nearly exclusively from their ideas.

Let me give you an example to illustrate what I mean. If you were running a recipe contest instead, you'd probably get many people willing to submit a recipe to be included in an upcoming recipe book you did. In fact, people would be tickled that they were included in your book...and word-of-mouth alone would help spur sales.

That's assuming you have a regular recipe book that's chock full of recipes.

Suppose on the other hand you took the best recipe and sold it as a report. Imagine if YOU were the person who had submitted that recipe. Even though you signed a contract saying the recipe could be published, you'd be peeved if the person running the contest was making money off your single recipe.

See what I mean? Contestants don't mind being one of many, but they'll feel used if you try to benefit financially by gaining most of your profit from their sole efforts. So bottom line: if you use contestant entries, make sure you have lots of ideas from lots of individuals in the final book.

Hopefully those get the wheels turning. If creating your own product isn't your cup of tea (though really, do consider it since it's the most profitable), then you can always profit from this niche by going through the other usual routes. For example, you can profit by: getting clicks from AdSense on your content site; sending visitors to buy products through your affiliate links; sending newsletter readers to your affiliate products, etc.

TIP: Try this and see if it works for you...

When you send out a newsletter to your subscribers, only put teaser copy in the email, and ask that your subscribers click through to your website to read the rest of the article. Then on your webpage wrap your newsletter articles around well-placed AdSense ads.

Yes! You can get AdSense click income from your newsletter subscribers by using this simple trick! Plus, your emailed newsletter stands a chance of getting through the spam filters since it's so short.

Also, don't forget that you can collect email addresses and presell prospective customers via Overture, AdWords, and other pay-per-click (PPC) search engines.

TIP: I took a quick look at the competition, and as of the time of this writing there are a few competitors on Google, and Yahoo (via Overture.com) hardly has any competitors buying clicks. You may want to run a few test ads on Overture to see if running a PPC campaign in this niche is profitable.

TIP: Notice that in these keyword lists you see people searching for “free” pergola plans. Personally I wouldn’t spend too much time focusing on a segment of the population who’s looking for free plans, since their budget is clearly limited. Why go after a group of people specifically looking for freebies when you can instead focus on people who are surfing with their credit cards in their hand?

OK, if you get a feel for this market and decide that this could be profitable, there are a few ways to profit from the “freebie” crowd. For example, you could give them an ebook with free pergola plan or two. To make it profitable, you of course need to collect their email address in exchange for the book. Secondly, your free plans could include affiliate links to specific tools and materials they’ll need to build their pergola using this plan. This might not work as slick as it sounds, however...since presumably much of the material to build a pergola is heavy, and thus cheaper to buy locally where you don’t have to pay for shipping.

OK, it's time to take a look at the keyword lists. If you have any questions about what the headings and labels of these lists mean, please read the intro section at the beginning of this report since it includes a detailed explanation of headings, etc. For further information, you can also visit WordTracker.com.

The first list includes the raw keywords and counts. The next three lists are the KEI values for the top 100 keywords in Google, Yahoo, and MSN (respectively)...

BONUS: quick look at “arbor” keywords

As stated in the beginning of this report, the words pergola and arbor are used interchangeably by some people. Unfortunately, a lot of keyword searches related to “arbor” have to do with Ann Arbor, Arbor Day, and other arbors.

So what I did was compile a list of the top terms using “arbor” and then manually extracted out non-relevant terms. Had I done this while still in the WordTracker system, this keyword list would be numbered 1, 2, 3...etc. But since I didn’t do that, you’ll see large jumps in line numbers. Don’t worry, I am not with-holding any secret keywords – those gaps are merely where I manually deleted out unrelated arbor searches (e.g., Ann Arbor).

The purpose of this short list is to just give you an idea of the top arbor searches. It’s NOT a comprehensive list...but it is a good springboard for you if you decide to pursue arbor keywords in addition to pergola on your site.

TIP: Feeling ambitious, or do you want an offline business? Note that in these keyword lists, people are searching for “custom arbors” and “wedding arbors.” If you know a little something about arbors, you could potentially start up an offline business building these arbors for people...and perhaps you could focus on the wedding niche.

Niche Report #2: Wood Decks and Patios

Decks and patios are a bit like the aforementioned garden arbors and pergolas: they are something for the family to enjoy, yet the main draw is the way they “look” on the house. It doesn’t matter if Joe blow is allergic to sunlight – he’s going to put a deck on his house as a “house fashion statement.” If his neighbor has a deck, he wants one too – except his will be better.

Indeed, my unresearched hunch is that decks are not only added or remodeled to keep up with the neighbors, I also suspect they’re added or remodeled to increase the resale value of the house. That’s a niche you may want to look at more closely!

For this report we’ve narrowed down the broader topic of decks and patios to look exclusively at all things wooden. While primarily the searches have to do with how to build or take care of a wooden deck, there are a few other related items thrown in, like wooden patio furniture.

If we take a look at the top ten most-searched keywords, we find that the people primarily are searching for way to build or take care of their wooden deck.

“Wood patio furniture” actually tops the list, but it’s followed closely by people searching for information about how to build, construct, plan, resurface and stain their wood deck.

Here's a tip: while people evidently love the look of wood decks, the maintenance can be a hassle. The wood fades or even begins to rot from moisture. If it's a termite-infested area that could be a problem too. People want the wood deck, but they want to know that they won't have to constantly stain or refinish their deck.

So what does this mean to you? This opens the door for you to have a "review-style" site. You can review different types of wood. You can review different types of wood stain and other protection products. Get at people's fears (wood decks are expensive and difficult to maintain!) and desires (your friends will envy your beautiful wood deck!) in these reviews. Be honest, and the readers will trust you.

In the midst of these reviews you can have affiliate links to products (as in the case of the stain), Google AdSense ads (in the case of the wood review articles, since people probably won't order wood online since shipping would kill them), and of course affiliate links to design books for the do-it-yourself types.

Better yet, create your own ebook and sell it on your site (more profits for you, plus you can recruit a team of affiliates and joint venture partners to help you). For example, you can create an ebook full of secrets to keeping a wood deck beautiful with minimal maintenance and/or minimal expense. Or perhaps you prefer to create a book on how to build your own deck. Or maybe you want to write a book on how to remodel and refinish an existing deck.

Tip: Here's an "tried and true" idea you can use to get more traffic: create a "rebrandible" ebook that can be given away. This means that you create a report and give it to webmasters who own related sites. They can change ("rebrand") certain parts of the book, such as various affiliate links. Thus you've provided an incentive for webmasters to pass this report around.

Example: let's suppose on your site you're selling a book of "secrets" related to keeping a wood deck beautiful with minimal effort and expense. Your next step is to create a short report directly related to this topic. For example, perhaps this report talks about the pros and cons of staining a wood deck versus painting it. At the end of the report you create a call to action that compels the reader to click through to your site and buy your book. In the "rebrandible" version of this report, webmasters are allowed to change your direct site link to their affiliate link.

Ok, before I give you the keyword lists I am going to digress off onto one ...

Wild and crazy tangent...

Ready for another money-making idea? Here it is: scrap the “wood deck” website completely.

If you like to write, you may want to try your hand at writing “tips booklets,” and then selling them to companies to use as premiums. For example, you write a “do it yourself” tips booklet on refinishing your deck, and then you sell this booklet by the thousands to a lumbar or stain company to give away to their customers. They can “rebrand” the booklet to make it look like it came directly from them.

You see, this is related to the advertising specialties field. Have you ever received a pen, calendar, mug or other item from your local business? And was their company name proudly displayed on that item? Yep, that’s advertising.

One of the reasons that companies often give away calendars is because they know people use them for a year, so their advertising is in front of people every day for a year. Refrigerator magnets are popular because if they actually end up on the fridge, they’ll probably stay there “forever” and be used to hold up notes and school papers.

So now you can see why a tips booklet interests companies as an advertising tool: because it has staying power and is not likely to end up in the trash!

If this idea appeals to you, go see the expert (Paulette Ensign) at:

<http://www.tipsbooklets.com>

Ah yes, but I digress...

Now, on to the keyword lists. As usual we'll start with the overall keyword list in order of "most searched" to "least searched." Then we'll look at the KEI values in Google, Yahoo and MSN to see which keywords you should target when you start optimizing your site. If you have any questions about these lists and the labels used, please see the introduction to this report.

Niche Report #3: Remote Control Airplanes

Remote control (r/c) airplanes aren't just for kids. And in fact, I'd be willing to venture that a good chunk of the buyers and enthusiasts are adults.

You see, r/c airplanes aren't like r/c cars. You don't just flip a switch and race around, crashing into anything that gets in your way. Flying a r/c plane takes a bit of practice and a bit of skill. Crashing it can be an expensive mistake. Hence this sort of "toy" is often found in the hands of an adult.

With the general market of those who buy and fly r/c planes, you are going to find plenty of niches for you to tackle. Let's have a look at them in no particular order...

First, there are people who want "rtf" planes – "ready to fly." Chances are these people are novices, and perhaps this is their first plane. Or perhaps they are looking for a plane for their older child. In any case, they want something they can take out of the box and fly.

When writing your web copy (e.g., if you're an affiliate selling planes), you'll want to really get at this group's desire to fly the plane with ease. They may be a little scared that if they "mess up" and crash the plane, they're going to have to shell out the big bucks to get it fixed. Here's where you tell them how easy it is to fly the plane. But since accidents do happen, you also hit up on the plane's features that are beneficial to the accident-prone, whether the feature is a tough and/or flexible plane that can withstand a crash landing, or cheap replacement parts.

On the flipside, you have people looking for “ARTF” and “model” airplanes .

ARTF stands for “almost ready to fly,” which means that some assembly is required. There may be some novices who choose this option just because these planes tend to be slightly less expensive.

A model airplane is one that requires quite a bit of assembly. In most cases you’ll find experts buying model airplanes, since building them is part of their enjoyment in their hobby.

Another group of plane buyers include those looking for “cheap” or “discount” planes. As evidenced by the keyword they’re using to search the search engines, these people are primarily shopping on price. This group of buyers are also probably novices. They don’t want to jump into an expensive plane purchase until they see if they enjoy flying them. Thus you can hit upon the same desires as the other novices (easy to fly, cheap replacement parts, etc).

There are two other distinct groups you’ll encounter: those wanting gas planes and those wanting electric planes. Electric planes tend to be less complicated and thus more suitable for beginners. Gas planes tend to attract more advanced hobbyists.

I could go on, but I'm sure you're starting to see the point: when you are deciding which niche to tackle, you'll probably want to decide whether to target novice or expert fliers.

If you decide to target novice fliers, you'll do well to create an educational site. Novices want to read everything they can get their hands on. You can provide a content site that includes r/c airplane reviews (placing particular emphasis on those planes that are easy to fly and/or easy to repair), tips on learning how to fly a r/c plane, articles on how to repair a r/c plane, etc.

TIP: Make repair articles and others “printer friendly” so that the reader can print them off and have them by his or her side while working on the plane.

Summary: sites geared towards novices make good review style affiliate sites, as well as good content sites where you can place additional affiliate links or AdSense. Novices are looking for a source of information they can trust. If you present yourself as a comprehensive, trustworthy source, your visitors will buy through you.

TIP: Give your visitors an extra incentive to buy through your affiliate links. For example, advertise that if they buy a new r/c plane through your affiliate link, they'll get a “flying tips” report for free.

If you decide instead to target experts, you may find that a “community” site will serve you well. This means you include features on your site that will keep your visitors coming back, such as a forum and blog.

You see, the expert user doesn't need the basics. If your site provides them with articles on the pros and cons of getting an electric versus a gas plane, they'll click away and not come back. They KNOW the difference. They're experts.

What they want are reviews on NEW products. They want to be the first in their flying club to get their hands on a new plane and try it out. If you can prove to them that you're the one who will let them know asap when something new hits the r/c plane market, they'll be forever grateful and loyal to you.

They want articles on laws and regulations related to where they can fly their gas-powered planes.

They want to know how to build their own plane completely from scratch.

They want to know how to modify their existing planes to make them faster or more powerful.

And they want to talk with other r/c plane enthusiasts about their hobby...hence the reason forums and blogs are great features to add to an expert site. In particular forums are great because the users provide the content.

TIP: When you start marketing to this group, don't forget to go offline. Find flying clubs in your community and see if you can talk at their next meeting, advertise in their club newsletter, or advertise at their next event. If you like planes too, be sure to join the club.

OK, time to look at the keyword lists. As usual, there are four lists: the most searched to least searched ordered keyword list, and a KEI analysis from Google, Yahoo and MSN. See the intro at the beginning of this report for detailed explanations of how to read these reports...

Niche Finder's "Quick Looks" – Six Niche Ideas

Are you looking for ideas and don't mind putting in a little extra legwork to see what's profitable in a niche? That's where the "Quick Looks" come in. I'll give you a brief overview of the niche, a jumping off point or two, and you can decide whether to pursue the market. If nothing else, these markets will most likely spark other ideas in other niches!

Let's get started...

Quick Look #1: Coffee break time...

Targeting coffee drinkers is obviously profitable – just look at the success of Starbucks. Other online businesses have tried to jump on this coffee-drinking bandwagon by starting up coffee MLM's. And just look at all the places you can buy coffee online.

With everyone trying to grab their share of coffee drinker's money, you'll need to focus in to compete. When I ran a KEI analysis of some of the top coffee-related keywords, it looks like an ambitious person can slide into the "Jamaican coffee" niche.

Here's the KEI analysis of the top 100 keywords in Google. Check out all the Jamaican coffee searches at the top:

Quick Look #2: Mousetrap Cars

Here's a peculiar little niche I had never heard of until I stumbled on it two days ago: people who build and race mousetrap cars (e.g., cars you make out of mousetraps). Evidently some people do it for fun, while others are required to do it for school science projects.

It seems to be a fairly small niche, but at the same time there also doesn't seem to be much competition. If you're even slightly ambitious, you could dominate this niche and own "THE" site for mousetrap cars enthusiasts. When you plug the general term "mousetrap cars" into Yahoo, the first site on the list is a Geocities site (free hosting). Generally webmasters who use Geocities instead of springing for a related domain name aren't as serious about getting to the top of the search engines as someone who's willing to invest a few bucks.

Maybe that's a sign that this niche isn't very profitable. Could be. But it's also a pretty good sign that you can beat out your competition.

Quick Look #3: Science Fairs and Projects

Knowing that some people build mousetrap cars for science projects got me thinking about science fairs and science projects.

I'm guessing that in this group of searches you have two distinct niches. First, you have the ultra-competitive group that starts researching their project the day that it's assigned. They want the best project and the best display. They want to win. Creativity, unique ideas, and slick presentation are all extremely important to this group. It doesn't matter how elaborate a project is (indeed, the more complex the better), as long as it helps the student win.

On the other side of the coin you're also going to have the searchers who need a project and display for...TOMORROW. The student (or perhaps a parent) is looking for something quick and easy. If you can provide a site full of ideas for the procrastinator that will make him or her still look good at the fair, you will have his/her undying gratitude.

Quick Look #4: Hovercrafts

Boating enthusiasts make up a pretty big market. You have everything from those wanting fishing boats to those wanting boats to pull water-skiers, to those who want to spend lazy Sunday afternoons gliding around on their pontoons.

However, one type of boat that you don't hear about too much is the hovercraft. Yet there are plenty of people searching for information on hovercrafts – from where to buy one to how to build one and everything in between.

Here are the top 100 keywords in Google, complete with a KEI analysis:

Quick Look #5: You're looking for...pants?

Yes, people are looking for pants online. Sweatpants, specifically.

When I stumbled on this niche, I sort of shook my head and almost dismissed it.

Then I thought, why not? After all, there's a gentleman doing over a million dollars a year just selling black socks online (blacksocks.com). So maybe you can't use that exact model to sell sweatpants, but clearly there's a market.

Here's a hint: many people want something specific on their sweatpants, such as their favorite sports team. In fact, in the following KEI analysis you'll see that those looking for "Marine Corp sweat pants" are under-served. Go get 'em...

Quick Look #6: Whack those weeds!

People's weed eaters (weed eaters) appear to be breaking down left and right, and they're looking for replacement parts and repair info online.

In fact, in a moment you'll even see that the #6 phrase in terms of the KEI analysis is for people looking for a weed eater forum. I'm betting that people aren't getting so excited about their weed eaters that they just need to talk to other weed eater owners. Nope, I'm guessing these people are having problems and need help, or they want to buy repair parts.

What does that mean to you? It sounds like setting up a forum which includes a help section and a "buy, sell, trade" section would probably go over pretty well. You can set up affiliate links to companies who sell weed eaters and their replacement parts (like the string that whacks those weeds). You can set up Google AdSense. You can even have a free ebook to teach people how to string their weed eaters.

Interesting, no? Of course this tends to be a seasonal item, so keep that in mind if you run Google Adwords as an affiliate.
